Educators from school districts across Virginia, Maryland and West Virginia will be attending the fourth annual Teaching Inquiry with the Latest Technologies conference in Roanoke Feb. 28-29, 2000. The conference will feature hands-on workshops and sessions that focus on observation through participation. The SOLs will be a key feature this year. Each session will include an activity for teaching the SOLs in context.

This year's keynote speaker, Dr. Ron Kander, associate professor in Virginia Tech's materials science and engineering department, will discuss how to utilize green engineering concepts in the K-12 classroom.

The conference features many perks for educators, such as: Highlighting specific SOLs in each session; Providing in-service opportunities in science, mathematics and technology; Qualifying for Eisenhower funding; Providing Professional Development points.
